Drivers for Complaints and Feedback Management

Operational Efficiency

The drive to transform government is led by the desire to work faster and smarter. CDC Respond software streamlines and automates the processes for managing complaints and feedback, resulting in efficiency gains across the organisation.

Service Delivery

The Cabinet Office recognises that central government departments have to be responsive to the expectations of citizens. Initiatives and guidelines have been introduced to encourage individual departments to interact with the public and implement change programmes through organisational learning.

- Charter Mark demonstrates that an organisation has improved its processes to raise customer service levels. Key to achieving Charter Mark is the need to take a consultative approach to citizens by capturing and utilising all feedback, including complaints.
- Capability Reviews by the Cabinet Office assess each department's service delivery in order to measure performance and gauge how they are using feedback to identify and deliver service improvements that meet the citizen's expectations.

CDC Respond central government customers have experienced impressive results in productivity and ROI:

- The Pension Service has used CDC Respond since the early 90s and pioneered the use of complaints as a valuable tool for business refinement. The CDC Respond system has delivered benefits in both managing the process and ensuring pre-defined deadlines are met; and in collating data to identify key areas for improvement – resulting in efficiency gains for the organisation.
- The Legal Services Ombudsman deals with correspondence that is sensitive, confidential and time bound. Prior to using CDC Respond, the workflows were fragmented and difficult to manage. Since deploying CDC Respond, there is improved visibility of the work being processed; the number of hand-offs needed has reduced; and key deadlines are met at the right time.
- The Office of the Independent Case Examiner handles complaints against the CSA and has to deal with high volume workloads and demanding deadlines. The department selected CDC Respond because of its flexibility and ease of use which has resulted in reduced training for the users and increased efficiency in the department.
